Warwick Vase

The celebrated marble urn that became known as the Warwick Vase, was constructed from a number of 2nd Century fragments recovered in 1770 from a pool on the site of Hadrian's Villa near Rome. The Vase, whose reconstruction was paid for by Sir William Hamilton (1730-1803), British Envoy to the Court of Naples and enthusiastic archaeologist, was subsequently purchased by his nephew, George, 2nd Earl of Warwick (1746-1816).

It was at Warwick Castle, the Earl's country seat, that the Vase was installed as the interior centrepiece of a specially-built conservatory, completed by William Eborall, a local mason, in 1786. Before that, however, the Vase had become widely known through a series of three engravings by Giovanni Battista Piranesi (1720-1778), published in "Vasi, candelabri, cippi, carcofagi, tripodi, lucerne ed ornamenti antichi disegni" in Rome in 1778. Further interest was stimulated in 1800 with the appearance of a description of the Vase in "The Gentleman's Magazine".

The first replicas of the Warwick Vase in silver were made in 1811/1812, the most important of which were a set of twelve in silver-gilt made for the Prince Regent.
